BEPORTS.

Saxton, a member of the committee, said that he supposed action on the bill would be deferred on account of the absence from the city of Haskell, by whom it was introduced. For his part he was opposed to the measure, as he believed county commissioners were already clothed with sufficient power to transact all ordinary business and he did not see the necessity of its further extension.

Murray said that in the absence of the originator of the bill he would state the points that the bill was intended to cover. He was informed that in Dawson county, which Haskell represented, there was now a surplus of $4,000 in the road fund and $7,000 in the poor fund. Possibly this condition did not exist in other counties of the territory, it did not in his own (Missoula) but he could see no reason why a transfer but he could see no reason why a transfer from one fund to another should not be made in counties where such a condition of made in counties where such a condition of affairs did exist. Hunt's gambling bill then came up and developed more life and oratory than had been anticipated. Middleton moved an amendment by inserting the names of two more games, which was adopted.

Bicaford moved an amendment which practically prohibits the playing of any and all gambling games. He sustained his view by an eloquent moral disquisition, and was followed by Brown in the same strain. Before the gentlemen had completed their speeches the lobby and gallery had been filled with listeners and the audience heartily applauded both gentlemen.

The amendment was opposed by Middleton moved an amendment to in an able address, he taking the utilitarian and practical view of the question, and he was supported by Kennedy. When the amendment came to a vote it was lost by a tie vote of five to five, one member not voting and one being in the chair.
